BARN

BURNED.

Tobacco Barn of M. D. Reed's Burned Last Friday Night.—Between Six and Seven Thousand Pounds of Tobacco Lost.—No Insurance.

A large tobacco barn belonging to Mr. M. D. Reed, at Valley Hill, was destroyed by fire last Friday evening at about 8 o'clock, together with nearly all the contents. The origin of the fire is a mystery, no having been about the barn with matches or fire, and it is thought by some to be the work of an incendiary. In the barn were about 9,000 pounds of tobacco, the most of which belonged to Tom Reed, son of M. D. Reed, and this, with the exception of two or three thousand pounds, was lost. Besides this, a lot of corn, hay, a good buggy, some farming implements and harness were burned. There was no insurance on the barn or contents and the loss is a total one.

Colored Child Drowned.

A little three-year-old colored child of Susan Graves was drowned last Saturday afternoon at about 1:30 o'clock in a spring on Mr. Thos. W. Simms' place in the western part of town. The mother had sent the little girl to the spring to get some water. In about a half hour after this a colored woman went to the spring and found the child in the water, her head being toward the bottom. She hurriedly pulled her up and lay her upon her face, but it is presumed that she had been dead for several minutes when found. The mother of the child is a hard working woman, and has quite a number of friends among the white people who sympathize with her in the loss of her child.

Telephone Meeting.

Representative men from nearly every section of the county met in Mr. W. F. Grigsby's law office yesterday afternoon, in connection with the City Council, to consider plans for the extension of the telephone system throughout Washington county. The system as it now is, is very unsatisfactory in many sections, but it is now believed that in a short time improvements will be made which will prove a great convenience to the people. Mr. Hall, representing the Cumberland Telephone Company, was present and stated that if the town and county would grant franchises to the Cumberland Company, and make one or two other minor concessions, his company would extend the lines to all sections of the county and establish exchanges in communities, or towns, where as many as thirty subscribers were secured. In view of this statement committees were appointed to confer with the people at Mackville, Willsburg, Mooreville, and other points. At another meeting to be held on next Monday these committees will report, at which time it is thought matters will be brought to a definite shape. These exchanges will not only prove a great convenience, but will be the means of saving to the people considerable each month on box rent.

On last Saturday afternoon, while the three-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hardisty was at play in a vacant lot to the rear of their home on Covington avenue, he fell into a large sink hole in which was about one foot of water. A colored man, who was at work near by, saw the little fellow when he toppled over and rushed to his rescue. Had it not been for this timely rescue the child would undoubtedly have drowned.

GOOD WORK

Done By Fiscal Court.—Tax Levy Reduced Thirty Cents On The Hundred Dollars.—Road Supervisor To Be Elected.

The April term of the Fiscal Court met last Tuesday, but owing to the absence of some of the Magistrates, adjourned until Wednesday, when a quorum was present. Most of the session was taken up in discussing the turnpikes and bridges of the county, and as to the best means of obtaining and supervising them. A tax levy of six on every $100 of taxable property in the county was made for turnpikes and bridge purposes and a similar levy for a general county fund. It will be noticed from this that the tax levy for Washington county is much less than last year. For the year 1904 there were several levies, while this year there are but two, the levy for 1905 being 20c less than that of 1904. This speaks well for the county, as it shows a growth financially, and a prosperity that is soon felt by the taxpayer. In addition to this the usual poll tax levy of $1.50 was made.

Mr. Robt Noel was unanimously re-elected County Treasurer, at a salary of $100 per year, in addition to all the interest on the county funds in his hands.

Perhaps the most important business transacted by the court was in regard to the supervision of turnpikes and bridges. It has heretofore been customary for each Magistrate to act as supervisor of the roads allotted to him and in his magisterial district. Last November the Court of Appeals, in the case of Boyd county vs Arthur-Judge Hobson delivering the opinion—decided that the Fiscal Court had no right to enter an order appointing a County Magistrate supervisor in his district, and that such Magistrate could not issue an order for his payment as such supervisor. This decision called for a change, which was made at this session.

It was decided to appoint a County Supervisor of roads and bridges, whose duty it will be to inspect and keep in good repair all roads and bridges in the county. Such action is highly commendable, for it concentrates all work and funds for that purpose in the hands of one man, who, if efficient, can afford to devote his entire time to that alone. The court will meet in extra session on the 20th, to elect a man for that position. We think this plan a good one, and are confident our roads will be kept in better condition in the future.

PRATHER'S CREEK.

We hope to see a letter in The Sun from Mackville soon.

ATTENDED GIVEN A FUNERAL LIFE TERM

Died Mother of Her Three Children Whom She Had Killed With Poison—Sympathy With Her.

Paduach, Ky., April 4.—The three Brockwell children who were poisoned by their mother, according to her confession, were to-day laid to rest in Oak Grove cemetery.

Three white caskets held the bodies of the little ones. The caskets were made especially for them and each was deposited in a separate grave. The original plan was to bury the children in one casket in the same grave. A lot was purchased with money donated by the citizens. There is some left and with it and additional subscriptions a monument will be erected on the lot.

Two white hearse, one bearing two of the caskets, carried the remains to the cemetery. White horses drew the hearse and the cortege was almost a mile long. Flowers were numerous. The local florists had to send out of town to fill all the orders. The caskets were buried in beautiful blossoms, and it is estimated that $300 was spent for them.

Rev. Mr. Newell delivered a beautiful, simple oration, making brief mention of how the children came to their death. Mrs. Brockwell, the mother and self-confessed poisoner of the three children, attended the services under guard.

At the graves the ceremony was short. Such a crowd surrounded the graves that the people had to be kept back by men selected for the purpose. It is estimated that between 5,000 and 6,000 people attended the funeral. The caskets were not opened at the church or cemetery.

To-morrow morning the examining trial of Mrs. Brockwell and George Albrighton, her alleged accomplice, will begin. Albrighton will be carefully guarded, as he has been threatened with lynching and burning at the stake.

Sympathy is with the woman and she is in no danger. Hazel, the surviving child, will be a star witness. It is claimed by the mother that Hazel one night overheard Albrighton suggest the heinous crime. Extra policemen will be on duty in the police court to preserve order.

Mr. Rockefeller's Money

By Rev. Thos. B. Gregory.

"God gave me my money," says the billionaire head of the Standard Oil Company.

I don't know why, but I am reminded just here of the old African, who, in a moment of pious enthusiasm, arose in meeting and delivered himself as follows:

"Brothers and sisters, you know and I know that I ain't been what I oughter been. I've robbed hermosses and stole hogs and told lies and got drunk and slashed folks wi' my razor, and shot craps and cursed and swore; but I thank God there's one thing I ain't never done—I ain't never lost my religion."

I would be a graceless wretch of a fellow were I to attempt to draw a parallel between the negro and Mr. Rockefeller—further than to remark that, like the African in question, the head of the Standard Oil Company is nothing if not "religious."

Mr. Rockefeller's rise to his present position has not been along the "primrose path of dalliance." He has had a hard road to travel, and all sorts of things have happened to him; but he has never "lost his religion."

He has always been a church member, has always contributed to the Lord's work, and, according to his own account, he has been amply rewarded. The Lord has given him a thousand million dollars!

So he says. And it may be true. But this is a cold and heartless world, and in all probability there are some who will look upon Mr. Rockefeller's alleged familiarity with the Lord as being a trifle immodest.

These heartless critics will be just mean enough to liken him to the Pharisee who was always thanking God that he "was not as other men."

If it is a fact that God has given Mr. Rockefeller this colossal fortune, the inference would seem to be justifiable

Mrs. Brockwell Will Be Given a Life Sentence For the Murder of Her Three Children.

Paduach, Ky., April 8.—Mrs. Mary Brockwell, who, March 24, murdered her three small children, will probably be given a sentence of life imprisonment in the penitentiary. The attorneys for Mrs. Brockwell and the Commonwealth's Attorney have agreed on this, and next week sentence will be passed upon the murderers, and she will immediately be taken to the penitentiary at Frankfort.

George Albrighton, the young man who Mrs. Brockwell said was an accomplice in the murder of the children, and who, she claimed, suggested that she poison the children, was released from the county jail this morning. The grand jury, finding no evidence upon which to indict him, voted as a whole to liberate him. Mrs. Brockwell was to-day indicted by the grand jury on three separate counts charging her with willful murder. It is now believed that there will be no other indictments in connection with the murder, as the story of Mrs. Brockwell that some one told her to poison the children is not credited.

The attorneys for the prosecution think that the murder of the children was deliberately planned by the mother for many days, as Hazel Brockwell gave testimony to that effect to Commonwealth's Attorney Lovett and County Attorney Graves Friday afternoon. Hazel said that her mother came to her on Thursday afternoon, the day previous to the murder, while Hazel was playing with the baby, and asked her what she would do if the baby should die, and if she would care much. Hazel replied that she would never get over the shock if the child, which was her pet, died.

Take Me Home.

(Nathan Lafayette Bachman.)

Take me back to old Kentucky,
Where the crystal waters glist
As they dance along their borders,
Through the fragrant beds of mint;
Where the lasses and the horse
Are but terms for grace and speed,
And the whisky and the statesmen
Both are noted for their "bead."

Take me back to old Kentucky,
Where strong waters flow so free;
Where they cool off in the summer,
Neath the spreading julep tree,
Where the "high balls" and the "low balls"

Always hit the center square;
And you never have next morning
Rheumatism in your hair.

Take me back to old Kentucky,
Where the blue grass decks the hills;
Where they have no use for water,
Save for operating mills;

For they scorn it as a beverage,
On that ditch and bloody ground
And they claim—'er since the deluge—
That it tastes of sinners drowned.

Take me back to old Kentucky,
To the State where I was born;
Where the corn is full of kernels,
And the Colons full of 'corn';
Where to disapprove that beverage
Is to toy with sudden death
And they have a bonded warehouse
Where they barrel up their breath.

Take me back to old Kentucky,
Let me hear the pistol pop.
See the pigs and politicians
With their snouts eye-deep in slop;
Take me back to the blue mountains
Where they argue points with lead;
But you needn't rush the matter—
Take me back when I am dead.

To Avoid Pneumonia.

During the winter many persons become victims of pneumonia. Nobody is immune from the summons of the death captain. It is served upon the strong as well as upon the weak.

But there are certain rules of living which will reduce one's liability to the disease, says the Chicago Tribune. From the bulletins of the health department and from other authoritative sources the following rules may be set down for observance:

Do not overheat the house. Most people habitually dwell in apartments the temperature of which is from 3 to 10 degrees too high.

Wear light underwear and heavy overcoats rather than heavy underwear and light overcoats.

Keep warm when indoors even if it is necessary to build fires in seasons when it is unusual to do so. Avoid indoor chill and dampness as much as possible.

For this reason be careful to remove the chill before moving into apartments freshly papered or calcimined.

Be careful during variable weather. Where there is continual cold or constant warmth the disease is little known.

If you have an attack of the grip be unusually careful about your diet and about exposing yourself to the weather.

Neglected colds develop into pneumonia with startling rapidity.

Take plenty of exercise in the sunlight and fresh air. As good nursing is practically the only cure for pneumonia, so good living is practically the only preventive.

About Rheumatism.

There are few diseases that inflict more torture than rheumatism and there is probably no disease for which such a varied and useless lot of remedies have been suggested. To say that it can be cured is, therefore, a bold statement, but to make, but Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which enjoys an extensive sale, has met with great success in the treatment of this disease.

One application of the Pain Balm will relieve the pain, and hundreds of sufferers have testified to the efficacy of its use. Why suffer when Pain Balm affords such quick relief and costs but a trifle? For sale by C. J. Haydon.

Electricity Versus Steam.

Much interest has been taken in the plans of the New York Central railroad to substitute electric for steam locomotives in the terminal service of the road. The electrically driven engines will begin their work of drawing trains at a point a short distance out of New York, and one advantage that will accrue from the arrangement will be the abolition of the dangerous smoke and steam nuisance in the tunnel by which trains reach the Grand Central depot. Tests of new electric locomotives were recently made and proved successful in every respect.

Thomas K. Neidringhaus, Thomas K. Neidringhaus of St. Louis, who is said to be slated to succeed Francis Marlow Cockrell in the United States senate, is a successful business man and in the recent campaign was chairman of the Republican state committee of Missouri. It is said that he conducted the Republican canvass in that state without any financial assistance from the Republican national committee, and much credit is given to him by Republicans because of the majority the state gave Mr. Roosevelt.

The New State.

(Glasgow Times.)

That new State to be carved out of portions of Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia would be a combination of dandy and daisy. With forty-five counties in it, forty-four of them would be paupers, and probably all of them republican.

It would embrace the "moonshine" region of the three States mentioned and nearly all of the feud districts.

The democrat who would venture with in his borders would leave all hope behind, or at least conceal his identity or hide his feelings.

Fortunately, Congress can not manufacture states. All that it can do is to authorize Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia to act for themselves, and if these three States should act at all—which is doubtful—they could only submit the proposition to the voters.

Representatives Brownlow, of Tennessee; Slem, of Virginia, and Edwards, of Kentucky, announce that they will push the authorization bill through the next Congress—and they can if they will.

Because his wife insisted on calling him "Billy Goat," David Barringer, of Cohocton, O., has sued for divorce.

Waiting for the Word.
The advertising proposition all resolves itself into this: People in your community are thinking about your goods this very minute. They need them and they are waiting for you to make an attempt to rouse their interest by bizarre methods, for they are interested already. What the public wants of you is a clear statement of what you have to offer. That statement may be long or short. If making more than a price, it helps in making decisions. Simply say what there is to say in your favor. Say it briefly if possible. Say no more. Say it through the newspapers if you can.—Printers

WASHINGTON COUNTY OUT OF DEBT.

At the regular meeting of the Fiscal Court, held on Wednesday, April 5, the county tax rate was fixed at 50 cents for all purposes. One half of the amount was levied for turnpikes and bridges, and out of the remaining levy of 25 cents about 5 cents was appropriated to the dirt roads. From this it will be seen that the affairs of the county are being conducted at a very low cost to the taxpayers. In addition to this the county is now out of debt, a thing that could not be said for many years back. It is also now on a cash basis, all of its indebtedness being promptly met, and the treasury is in better condition than ever before known in the county's history. This, indeed, speaks well for the present county administration, for when they took charge of the affairs of the county, a little more than seven years ago, the indebtedness of the county was about $50,000, all interest-bearing, and it has certainly been a splendid administration of the county affairs to cancel this large indebtedness and make valuable internal improvements in the way of building bridges, meeting all expenses, including the extra expense incurred by smallpox, all of which has been done without an increase of taxes.

Too much can not be said in praise of our Fiscal Court and county officials. In fact Washington county officials were paid the compliment by a Government Inspector as having the best system found in any county in the State. When our present county administration seven years ago promised the people that they would wipe out the county indebtedness within eight years some of our citizens were slow to believe it, and many looked upon it as but a dream of what these officials would like to see, but within less time than that predicted the county's indebtedness has been wiped out, and the tax rate lowered 30 cents on the $100 of taxable property.

T. SCOTT MAYES.

While the Hon. T. Scott Mayes has made no definite announcement of his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Fourth district it is known by his friends that he will enter the race. To those of his friends in other counties who are now urging him to declare himself The Sun will say that at the proper time Mr. Mayes will make his announcement through the Democratic newspapers of the district and will at once enter upon active canvass. Strong pressure is being brought to bear upon him to make an early announcement of his candidacy, but

Mr. Mayes is not yet convinced of the necessity of this.

Just at this time quite a number are spoken of as probable candidates for the nomination, though it is very likely that the field will be thinned out before the "final finishing day."

Those who are urging Mr. Mayes' candidacy are quite sure—even at this early day—that he will capture five counties in the district. Indeed leading Democrats in as many counties in the district have written him that he will get the instructions of their respective counties if conventions are held and large majorities if primaries are held. Mr. Mayes' friends here are very much gratified over the bright prospects he has of capturing the nomination, and when the time comes to "do things" Washington county Democrats are going to use every honorable means to do the right thing to "do" the other fellow.

LONG RUN.

Having traveled to the seventy-fifth milestone of life, the relatives and friends of J. W. Pope tendered him a birthday dinner at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Mollie Coyle, on the 7th instant. The dinner was excellent and well served. Music, with prayer and talk, was the order of the evening. All of the contents were destroyed with the exception of about 3,000 pounds of tobacco. The loss is very great to both parties, as they carried no insurance. The origin of the fire remains a mystery to be solved.

Mastic Mixed Paint

"The Kind That Lasts"

It is a demonstrated fact that Mastic paint, covering 300 square feet—two coats—is cheaper at 50 per cent higher price than a paint covering 200 square feet, to say nothing of its greater durability. So the economical man can safely figure it is wise economy to use Mastic paint. It lasts long after the price is forgotten.

UNIFORM BOOKS

Must Be Substituted For Those Of American Book Company. Supt. Fuqua So Directs.—Important Circular Addressed To County Superintendents.

Frankfort, Ky., April 8.—State Superintendent Fuqua, in a circular letter addressed this morning to County School Superintendents of Kentucky calls their attention to a judgement of the Mason Circuit Court for $10,000 against the American Book Company, being the full amount of its bond to counties under the old system, and notifies them that it is necessary, the company refusing to renew this bond, that all counties having such contracts shall cancel them, and at once substitute the books of the State uniform series. The letters, which is of wide interest, is, in full, as follows:

The Court of Appeals having affirmed a decision of the Mason Circuit Court against the American Book Company, by which Mason county got a judgement, for $10,000, the full amount of said company's bond, under and by authority of which said American Book Company secured the adoption of certain text books for use in the various counties of this State, under the former county adoption law, sections 60 and 61 of the old schoolbook law, the same being sections 4,423 and 4,424 of the Kentucky Statutes, and as said American Book Company refuses to execute a new bond for the continuance of the said county adoptions of its text books, now under contract in certain counties (unexpired county adoptions), you are hereby notified that it will be unlawful for the common schools of the Commonwealth to continue using, or to permit to be used, any of the text books published by the American Book Company on any such county adoption contracts, as all such county adoptions are forfeited by said company by its refusal to execute a new bond for the continuance of such county adoptions, the provisions of the law relative to such county adoptions being as follows:

Upon the failure or refusal of any such publisher or person to comply with the provisions of this act within the time herein specified, the text books of such publisher or person selling the same shall be removed from the county schools and of every county by the County Board thereof in which the same have been adopted. [Kentucky Statutes, Section 4,424.]

It will therefore be required of all counties having such contracts for text books published by the American Book Company to discontinue their use from this date and substitute for such books the corresponding books of the State unifom series. The penalties for using other books than the State series, except such as are under legal contract, are upon the County School Book Commission and teachers, the former being liable to a fine of from $100 to $500 and the latter (teacher) cannot draw salary while using other books than those under legal State or county contract. This applies only to the publications of the American Book Company at present. Other suits are pending against other companies and you will be advised of the conclusion of these. The Court of Appeals holds that only one recovery can be made against any one company, and such recovery shall be for the full amount of the bond. Mason county has been awarded the amount of the American Book Company's bond and other suits against it will be useless.

Big Sale of Property.

(Lebanon Enterprise.)

The largest sale of real estate that has been made for many years was that of Monday, the property belonging to the Hood estate.

The sale was made by Master Commissioner Sam T. Spalding under an order of the Circuit Court in the case of Flora Hood et al., administrators, versus L. Shelby Irvine, et al. There were thirteen separate pieces of property sold, consisting of a number of very valuable lots in town, and several tracts of land just outside the corporate limits of the city.

The Ballot and Office.

In 1777 it was written into the constitution of Vermont that "the house of freemen of this state shall consist of persons most noted for wisdom and virtue, to be chosen by the freemen of every town in this state."

Time and conditions have lowered our standard. We are content with average wisdom and average virtue, and in years of apathy virtue and wisdom are quite forgotten, and we elect whom the machine nominates. Rotations, consisting of a number of very valuable lots in town, and several tracts of land just outside the corporate limits of the city.

Worshippers of Strange Gods.

Snake worshippers are more numerous than river worshippers in the Punjab. They have always been a large denomination in heathen countries. Why they worship snakes is a problem that has been frequently discussed to no particular purpose. But people who worship owls, bats, lizards, rats and mice will worship anything, and perhaps snake worshippers are so common merely because snakes are so widely distributed and so far from exclusive in their habits. If a man worships an owl, or an ornithomys, he must go to the owl, or the ornithomys, as every one is to do so, but serpents are everywhere. So is the earth (Frith), and the earth is Hertha, Demeter, under many other names, has never wanted adorers.

Even the untamed Pawnees are earth worshippers, as is shown by articles by way of sacrifice, which is more economical than burning them, as they think. So is the earth (Frith), and the earth is Hertha, Demeter, under many other names, has never wanted adorers.

Among the Cannibals.

An Experience of English Naturalists Which They Will Remember. Killing and Eating Members of Hostile Tribes.

The popular idea of a cannibal seems to be about as far removed from reality as any idea can be, according to the report of A. E. Pratt, a distinguished English naturalist, who has just returned from a two years' sojourn among cannibal tribes in British New Guinea.

During his stay among the aborigines of Papua, New Guinea, where Mr. Pratt had gone in search of butterflies, he found the savages were within sight of civilization, although once in awhile they would kill, cook and feast upon an enemy.

These Papuans are a very interesting race. They are split up into tribes, and each tribe is again divided into villages, the largest of which occasionally consists of thirty houses, or thirty families. These villages are always situated on the ridges of mountains, and the system of tribal rule is patriarchal, but there is a headman to each village, who exercises a certain limited authority over the families. In the case of marriages, however, the chief power is in the hands of the father of the family.

Although they are polygamists, it is seldom that a Papuan has more than two wives. He is permitted by custom to have as many as he can support, but such is the poverty among them that he is a master indeed who can have in his train more than two wives.

There is only a comparatively narrow strait separating New Guinea from Australia, but the Papuans are not only higher in the human scale than the Australian blacks, but they do not practice some of the revolting initiatory rites which are common with the Australian aborigines. In stature the Papuans are, especially the mountaineers, of fine physique. In a swampy near Port Moresby there was found an amphibious tribe which displays a most wonderful exemplification of the law of adaptation, being well fitted for life in the water.

It is the general disposition of these cannibals which causes most remark. They are jovial and light hearted and, when one has passed their cold and hospitable and friendly. Mr. Pratt had an extraordinary example of their confidence upon one occasion.

"After a stay of some months at Mount Kebea," said Mr. Pratt, "I was anxious to push farther on into the interior, but found myself absolutely without beads, which are the journey money of the Papuan tribes. It would have delayed me too long to have waited for the return of my messengers, who had been sent to the coast for a further supply, so I accordingly set upon the expedient of trying how far my credit with the natives would go. I called the tribe-men, women and children together, and in a lengthy harangue I explained the situation to them."

"Finally I asked them if they would lend me their beads, which every one of them wore on his or her person in considerable profusion, promising to pay them double the quantity. Their heads are to the Papuans as precious as her pearls are to a grande dame, but nevertheless every man, woman and child immediately consented to the loan. This appreciation of the idea of credit—denotes a considerable receptivity of mind and shows that the Papuans would not be inaccessible to civilization."

Cannibalism is not a universal practice among the Papuans—that is to say, all tribes do not deliberately practice it—but all of them do enjoy a human feast after a man has been killed in a fight or for reason murdered. While Mr. Pratt was camped at Mount Kebea he received one morning an unpleasant surprise. It is the custom of the natives who live upon the mountain ridges to shoot the news to each other. On this occasion the natives of the village on an opposite hilltop shouted over to Mr. Pratt's party that they had killed and eaten the brother of one of his most trusted and faithful hunters.

Immediately there was great excitement in his camp, for the vendetta is practiced among these people. A life for a life is their cry, although persons in other parts of the world who echo the cry make claims to civilization. The brother of the murdered man summoned all the other villagers and then went to Mr. Pratt with a demand for guns to shoot the enemy. This demand was refused, and the village was noisy and excited all day on account of the refusal.

There was reason to believe that a long war between the tribes would follow, when the third day an emissary from the tribe that had eaten one of Mr. Pratt's servants arrived on a mission of peace. They seemed to fear that perhaps they had been wrong and wanted to make reparation. Reparation was agreed out to be one pig for the man who was slain and eaten. This magnificent offer was accepted by the brother of the victim and by the villagers. So the pig was brought, was killed, roasted and eaten at a great feast, and the incident was closed.

Another experience with the cannibals fell to the lot of Mr. Pratt on a night of the 18th. He had sent to a distant part of the island to get supplies. He had learned the language and had the habit of the people, but his route day through a hostile territory on his way out he experienced no difficulty, but on the return journey he and his party were stopped by the hostile tribe with a demand for one of their boys to be killed and eaten. This came about through a report which had reached them that one of the hostile tribe had been killed. Consequently they would not feel satisfied until they had feasted off a member of the tribe which had caused his death.

It was a crucial test for a youngster of eighteen to undergo; but, being well armed, young Pratt parleyed with the man maters and persuaded them to abandon their demand. Early next morning he and his party slipped quietly away.

The Motu-Motu, who inhabit Hood's bay, are known as the piebald tribe owing to the peculiar marks upon their bodies. They are one of the mysteries of New Guinea, and their houses, which are built upon an open wooden framework, are just as curious as they are. They use a slanting pole as a stairway, and some of the houses even have "ladders" for the dogs to use. As with some savage people, the women are the brewers of wood and drawers of water. They are the burden bearers, often carrying loads weighing as much as fifty pounds. They are, however, treated with great consideration by the men, whose duty it is to guard and protect the women and to do the hunting and fishing necessary to keep the family ladder properly stocked. The chief substance of the Papuan apart from game and of course an occasional enemy are yams, taros and bananas. These are usually grown some little distance from the villages. The ground is tilled by the young women, who are secured against attack by a guard of young warriors. The costume of a bragg is usually confined to a necktie and a headress and an armband of plaited pandanus fiber. The women are also fully and fashionably attired when their hair is dressed and a string of beads is hung around their necks. A laundry would starve to death in New Guinea.

Hunting and fishing are followed by the Papuan with primitive ingenuity. The fishing is accomplished by means of a net which is made by spiders. When a Papuan wants a net he first cuts a likely bamboo pole, then bends it in a great loop and sets it up in a forest. Each day he visits it to see how his net is growing.

Soldiers With Fans.
The use of fans in Japan is not confined to the fair sex. The men are much given to wielding them, and even when they go to war they take them along. During the warm months of last summer it was no uncommon thing in Manchuria to see a company of soldiers squatting on the ground and fanning themselves during a lull in hostilities. The brave deeds of the Japanese soldiers have shown that they are by no means effeminate despite their use of the fan.

Has Come to Stay.

Mayor-elect Edward F. Dunne, of Chicago, delivered an address at Cooper Union, in New York, last week, under the auspices of the Municipal Ownership League. He told how he expected to carry out his ideas to secure control of the street railway system of Chicago. He asserted, in closing, that municipal ownership had come to stay; that government ownership of the railroads, telegraph and express companies was a practical question upon which the people must pass in a very short time, and that the politicians and parties who ignored this sentiment must be prepared for a short-lived career.

CHAPTER VI.

FERCE emotions are necessarily transient, but for the hour they exhaust the psychic capacity. The sailor had gone through such mental stress before it was noon that he was benumbed, wholly incapable of further sensation.

Being in good condition, he soon recovered his physical powers. He was outwardly little the worse for the encounter with the devilfish. The skin around his mouth was sore. His waist and legs were bruised. One sweep of the ax had cut clean through the bulging leather of his left boot without touching the flesh. In a word, he was practically unharmed.

He had the doglike habit of shaking himself at the close of a fray. He did so now when he stood up. Iris showed clearest signs of the ordeal. Her face was drawn and haggard, the pupils of her eyes dilated. She was gazing into depths illimitable, unexplored. Compassion awoke at sight of her.

"Come," said Jenks gently. "Let us get back to the island."

He quietly resumed preeminence, helping her over the rough pathway of the reef, almost lifting her when the difficulties were great.

He did not ask her how it happened that she came so speedily to his assistance. Enough that she had done it, daring all for his sake. She was weak and trembling.

Beneath the firm sand, she could walk alone.

"Did the thing grip you?" she nervously inquired.

"All over at once, it felt like. The beast attacked me with five arms." She shuddered. "I don't know how you could fight it," she said. "How strong, how brave, you must be!"

This amused him. "The vilest coward will try to save his own life," he answered. "If you use such adjectives to me, what words can I find to do justice to you, who dared to come close to such a vile looking creature and kill it. I must thank my stars that you carried the revolver."

"Ah!" she said. "That reminds me. You do not practice what you preach. I found your pistol lying on the stone in the cave. That is one reason why I followed you."

It was quite true. He laid the weapon aside when delving at the rock and forgot to replace it in his belt.

"It was stupid of me," he admitted, "but I am not sorry."

"Why?"

"Because, as it is, I owe you my life."

"You owe me nothing," she snapped. "It is very thoughtless of you to run such risks. What will become of me if anything happens to you? My point of view is purely selfish, you see."

"Quite so. Purely selfish," he smiled sadly. "Selfish people of your type are somewhat rare, Miss Deane."

She moved toward the cave, but he cried:

"Wait one minute. I want to get a couple of crowbars."

"What for?"

"I must go back there. He jerked his head in the direction of the reef. She uttered a little sob of dismay.

"I will incur no danger this time," he explained. "If he catches me, I must have them; they may mean salvation."

When Iris was determined about anything her chin dimpled. It puckered delightfully now.

"I will come with you," she announced.

"Very well. I will wait for you. The tide will serve for another hour."

He knew he had decided rightly. She could not bear to be alone yet. Soon the crowbars were ready, and she returned to the reef. Scrambling now with difficulty over the rough and dangerous track, Iris was secretly amazed by the remarkable ease of the daring activity she displayed during her earlier passage along the same precarious roadway.

"Then she darted from rock to rock with the fearless versatility of a chamois. Her only stumble was caused, she recollected, by an absurd effort to avoid wetting her dress. She leaped so nervously when they reached the place. This time Jenks lifted her across the intervening channel.

They were standing on the landward side of the shallow water in which he fought the octopus.

Already the dark dull emitted by his assault in its final discomfiture was passing away owing to the slight movement of the tide.

"Now that you have brought me here with so much difficulty, what are you going to do?"

"I have no idea," she said, "but I am mad enough for you to attempt to do that passage again. Where there is one of those horrible things there are others, I suppose."

"That is one reason why I brought the crowbars," he explained. "If you will sit down for a little while I will have everything properly fixed. I am delirious with one of the bars until it lodged in a crevice of the coral. Then a few powerful blows with the back of the ax wedged it firm enough to bear any ordinary strain. The rope ends reeved through the pulley on the tree were lying where they fell from the girl's hand at the close of the "Admirable! But we can measure neither hours nor pounds."

"I think we can do both. I will construct a balance of some kind. Then, with a ham slung to one end and a rifle and some cartridges to the other, I will tell you the weight of the ham to an ounce. To ascertain the time I have already determined to fashion a sundial. I remember the requisite divisions with reasonable accuracy, and a little observation will enable me to correct any mistakes."

"You are really very clever, Mr. Jenks," said Iris, with admiration.

"Have you spent several years of your life in preparing for residence on a desert island?"

"Something of the sort. I have led a queer kind of existence, full of useless purposes. Fate has driven me into a corner where my odds and ends of knowledge are actually valuable. Such accidents make men millionaires."

"Useless purposes?" she repeated. "I can hardly credit that. One uses such a phrase to describe those people alive with foolish activity. Your worst enemy would not place you in such a category."

"My worst enemy made the phrase effective at any rate, Miss Deane."

"You mean that he ruined your career?"

"Well—er—yes. I suppose that describes the position with fair accuracy."

"Was he a very great scoundrel?"

"He was and is."

Jenks spoke with quiet bitterness. The girl's words had evoked a sudden flood of recollection. For the moment he did not notice how he had been trapped into speaking of himself, nor did he see the quiet content on Iris's face when she elicited the information that his chief foe was a man. A certain tremendous hesitancy in her manner when she next spoke might have warned him, but his hungry soul could only feel the warm sympathy of her words, which fell like rain on parched soil.

"You are tired," she said. "Won't you smoke for a little while and talk to me?"

He produced his pipe and tobacco.

"That is a first rate pipe," she declared. "My father always said that a straight stem, with the bowl at a right angle, was the correct shape. You evidently agree with him."

"Absolutely."

"You will like my father when you meet him. He is the very best man alive, I am sure."

"You are great friends, then?"

"Great friends! He is the only friend I possess in the world."

"What! Is that quite accurate?"

"Oh, quite. Of course, Mr. Jenks, I can never forget how much I owe to you. I like you immensely, too, although you are so—so gruff to me at times. But—just now you see, my father and I have always been together. I have neither brother nor sister, not even a cousin. My dear mother died from some home fever when I was quite a little girl. My father is everything to me."

"Dear child!" he murmured, apparently after his thoughts alone, and not addressing her directly. "So you find me gruff, eh?"

"A regular bear when you lecture me. But that is not occasionally. You are very nice when you like, when you forget your past troubles. And pray, why do you call me a child?"

"Have I done so?"

"Not a moment ago. How old are you, Mr. Jenks? I am twenty—twenty last December."

"And I?" he said, "will be twenty-eight in August."

"Good gracious!" she gasped. "I am very sorry, but I really thought you were forty at least."

"I look it, no doubt. Let me be equally candid and admit that you, too, show your age markedly."

She smiled nervously, and what a lot of trouble you must have had to—give you those little wrinkles in the corners of your mouth and eyes," she said.

"Wrinkles! How terrible!"

"I don't know. I think they rather suit you. Besides, it was stupid of me to imagine you were so old. I suppose exposure to the sun creates wrinkles, and you must have lived much in the open air."

"Early rising and late going to bed are bad for the complexion," he declared solemnly.

"I often wonder how army officers manage to exist," she said. "They never seem to get enough sleep. In the east at any rate."

"So you assure I have been in the army?"

"I am quite sure of it."

"May I ask why?"

"Your manner, your voice, your quiet air, everything, the very way you walk, all betray you."

"Then," he said sadly, "I will not attempt to deny the fact. I held a commission in the Indian staff corps for nine years. I was a hobby of mine, Miss Deane, to make myself acquainted with the best means of conquering my men and keeping them in good health under all sorts of fanciful conditions and in every kind of climate, especially under circumstances when ordinary stores were not available. With that object in view I read up every possible country in which my regiment might be engaged. I learned the local names of common articles of food and ascertained particularly what provision nature made to sustain life. The study interested me. Once, during the Sudan campaign, it was really useful and procured me promotion."

"Tell me about it!"

"During some operations in the desert it was necessary for my troop to follow up a small party of rebels mounted on camels, which, as you probably know, can go without water much longer than horses. We were almost with in striking distance when our horses completely gave out, but I luckily no-

Possibilities of Advertising

The enormous possibilities of a well conducted advertising campaign, where care is used in the proper selection of the most widely circulated newspapers and careful preparation of advertising copy, supported by goods of commendable quality, was interestingly presented and acknowledged at the annual meeting of the stockholders of the National Business Company, which was held in Jersey City recently, at which Mr. A. W. Green, chairman of the board of directors, presented a report, in which he said, "The sales of our advertised package goods are constantly increasing, and we are always enlarging the scope of our advertising, with the effect that the value of our good will, which has become our most valuable asset, is continually increasing."

The magnitude of the business of this company, but six years old, and which is admittedly due to the intelligent advertising, is shown by the statement that the total assets are $212,105,047.68, of which over $52,000,000 is represented by the plant, real estate, machinery, patents, etc., owned by the company, and that the sales for the twelve months ended with Jan. 31 of this year amounted to $40,532,114.50, the earnings for this period amounting to $3,709,516.02—Philadelphia Record.

Economy in Advertising.

If you could meet your entire trade personally and could explain to each the merits of all your different goods, you would need no advertising. You can't do this. As a matter of fact, economy you advertise—the public what you have for sale. Each year additional business will result. It makes it more to do business, less work.

If you are satisfied with your business, don't you feel a satisfaction in your advertising? Make it a feature of your business, and the end of each year you will find the value of advertising.
